

Kadish

You don't need to know Hebrew to say the Kaddish. This app teaches you, word by word.

In memory of the one who has departed

The traditional Kaddish does not contain the name of the deceased.

Even so, pausing before reciting it to say aloud the name of the one who has departed can make that moment more personal and more meaningful still.

It is not only a prayer. It is a prayer for someone.

And so, before beginning, you may say:

“This Kaddish is for the elevation of the soul of [name].”

In pronouncing the name, you bring that person back into memory.

You remember their life, their story, the moments you shared, and everything they left in you.

The name is a bridge between remembrance and prayer.

One Kaddish at a time

There will be days when it is easy. And there will be days when it is hard.

Perhaps you are tired, or travelling, or simply overtaken by longing. Perhaps you cannot get to the synagogue. Perhaps today is one of those days when even getting out of bed seems hard.

Do not think of all the months still ahead. Think only of today's Kaddish.

One day at a time. One Kaddish at a time.

Because to go on saying the Kaddish is also a way of going on saying:

“I remember you.”

“Your life mattered.”

“What you gave me is still with me.”

Death interrupts a life, but it does not erase the bond of love, the memory, and everything a person left in us.

May every Kaddish be a moment of faith, of memory, of connection, and of elevation for the soul of the one who has departed.

יהי זכרו/זכרה ברוך

May their memory be a blessing.

- The rabbi's recording synchronised word by word.
- Practice Mode, which pauses at every verse so you can repeat it.
- Dedicate the Kaddish to someone, and a yahrzeit reminder.

The Kaddish requires a minyan (ten adult men praying together) and is recited standing. It should normally be recited in a synagogue during the period of mourning.
